Many graduates are familiar with the never-ending question, What are your plans after graduation? and the desire to have the right answer or any answer at all. There can be so much pressure around this answer and you might find yourself completely unsure at the moment.

If you aren't sure what comes next for you after graduation, know that you are not alone. Everyone has their own timeline. While you might feel tempted to compare yourself to your peers who are off to start their first jobs or are continuing on with their education, you were not meant to have every detail figured out now.

For now, your answer can be, I'm not sure what comes next, and that's okay.

Have confidence in all the hard work and learning you have done throughout your college career. You are well-prepared, knowledgeable and an asset to the industry you hope to enter.

From classes to clubs and social activities and work, you have developed skills, knowledge and experiences to take with you and apply to achieving your future goals. There is a lot you don't know and will still have to learn, but there is also a lot you do know. Your hard work and dedication is worth celebrating!

Everything from your time in school to the unknowns of your future as an official alumnus — has a place in God's plan for your life. Try to embrace a sense of peace and calm in the next few months, knowing that there is a lot that is out of your hands that God has the power to control. God has helped prepare you for what is in your future and gives you each new day as an opportunity to lead the kind of life you want to live.

God will work out every event, obstacle and opportunity into his plan for your life. Even what you cannot control is a part of his plan for your future. Work hard and trust that by making the right decisions and putting in effort to grow, God will work all other things out for good.
