1 Peter 2:18-25

NOTES:

QUESTION 1

How does understanding that work existed before the fall of humanity change your perspective on the purpose and value of your daily labor?

QUESTION 2

In what ways can viewing your boss or supervisor as ultimately answerable to God help you maintain respect even in unjust workplace situations?

QUESTION 3

What does it mean practically to work 'as unto the Lord' rather than for human approval, and how might this shift transform your attitude toward difficult tasks?

QUESTION 4

How does the biblical truth that all humans are created in God's image challenge worldly definitions of success based on wealth, position, or power?

QUESTION 5

When facing workplace injustice, how can Christ's example of not retaliating when reviled guide your response to criticism or unfair treatment?

[illegible]

What would it look like for your workplace to become a primary proving ground of your faith rather than just a place to earn income?

How does the concept that 65% of Americans are unhappy with their jobs relate to the biblical call to find meaning and purpose through serving Christ in our work?

In what ways can Christians today undermine modern forms of injustice and oppression by living out the biblical principle that all people have equal value in God's eyes?

How might your testimony at work change if you consistently viewed every interaction and task as an opportunity to point others toward Christ?

What does it mean to entrust yourself to God who judges justly when you experience suffering or unfairness, and how does this differ from seeking immediate vindication?

Ephesians 6:5-9; Colossians 3:22-4:1.
