Resurrection Hope, Life Now

There is a love, a deep, moving warmth that goes out from Jesus. But this love is strong, powerful, life-changing, life-directing. New creation has begun; and its motivating power is love.

That is why, in Luke's gospel, the risen Jesus tells his followers to go and announce to the world that a new way of life has been opened, the way of "repentance" and "forgiveness"...Now there is a completely different way to live, a way of love and reconciliation and healing and HOPE! It's a way nobody's ever tried before, a way that is as unthinkable to most human beings and societies as—well, as resurrection itself. Precisely. That's the point. Welcome to Jesus' new world.

Here, then, is the message of Easter, or at least the beginning of the message. The resurrection of Jesus doesn't mean, "It's all right. We're going to heaven now." No, the life of heaven has been born on this earth. It doesn't mean, "So there is a life after death." Well, there is, but Easter says much, much more than that. It speaks of life that is neither ghostly nor unreal but solid and definite and practical. The Easter stories come at the end of the four gospels, but they are not about an "end." They are about a beginning. The beginning of the kingdom. God is now in charge, on earth as in heaven. And God's "being-in-charge" is focused on Jesus himself being king and Lord. The title on the cross was true after all. The resurrection proves it.
