Before knowing Christ, I would wander around aimlessly without purpose. I always tried to do right, but often fell short. I would know what I should do and still not do it. I was rebelling. My personal relationship would run hot and cold. I have always been grateful for what he has provided to me, but would take things for granted. I would be tested and never be able to stand up to the standards. I would always fail.

I attended Church as a kid with my grandmother, but never realized why. As I grew older I always had something else to do. I rebelled and continued to rebel despite God's love and protection over my life. I had several incidents of when God protected me despite my rebellion.

I met my wife and we started a family, that is when I realized that I needed more and I needed to do more for my family. I had a God sized hole missing in my life. It was then in my twenties with a young family that I called out to the LORD to come into my life. My wife started attending Church and brought the family along. I was given a trial and I failed again. I rebelled again, despite God's direction. Eventually I was filled with Christ's love. Being a first generation Christian I have struggles, but understand that God has this and I need to have faith and trust him. I try not to sweat the small stuff and worry.

I have trusted the Lord and he has provided us more than can be imagined. I was given a great job that allowed us to move to a better home with some property and start attending Church here at LightHouse.

A Bible verse that is meaningful to me is Philippians 4:6; Do not be anxious about anything, but in everything, by prayer and petition, with Thanksgiving present your requests to God.
