

If your family, friends, and neighbors followed your example of faith, would they make it to heaven, and what does your answer reveal about the authenticity of your walk with Christ?

How does the distinction between being 'free' and being 'free indeed' challenge your understanding of what true spiritual freedom looks like in daily life?

In what ways have you compromised your convictions to take the 'path of least resistance,' and what would it look like to stand firm like Winston Churchill did in his darkest hour?

What does it mean to be a 'vase' displaying Christ versus having 'two faces,' and which one more accurately describes your current spiritual life?

How does David's courage in facing Goliath contrast with the modern church's tendency to 'march out to war' but then retreat back to safety?

When was the last time you were truly offended by someone dishonoring God, and why do we often show more passion for sports teams than for defending God's name?

What would change in your life if you asked God each day who He wants you to be rather than telling Him what you want to do?

How does the concept of being 'on display' like the early Christians facing lions challenge your willingness to boldly proclaim Christ regardless of consequences?

What does it mean to be a 'hilarious giver' like the widow with two mites, and how does this principle of complete surrender extend beyond finances to every area of life?

Are you living to get to heaven, living like you are already in heaven, or simply floating toward danger without conviction, and what needs to change?
