

How does Ruth's selfless service to Naomi reflect Christ-like love, and in what ways can we cultivate that kind of sacrificial love in our own relationships?

What does the story of Ruth and Boaz teach us about waiting on God's timing, and how can we apply this patience in our own lives?

How does the concept of the kinsman-redeemer in Ruth's story foreshadow Christ's role as our Redeemer, and what implications does this have for our understanding of salvation?

In what ways does Boaz's integrity in handling the situation with Ruth challenge us to live with greater honor and character in our daily lives?

How does Naomi's journey from bitterness to hope mirror our own spiritual journeys, and what can we learn from her transformation?

What does this sermon reveal about the importance of reputation and noble character, and how can we build and maintain a godly reputation in today's world?

How does the story of Ruth challenge our understanding of God's providence and His ability to work good out of difficult circumstances?

In what ways does the sermon's emphasis on service inspire us to look beyond our own needs and serve others, even when it's difficult or inconvenient?

How does the concept of 'waiting on God' presented in the sermon challenge our culture's desire for instant gratification, and what spiritual benefits can come from learning to wait?

What lessons can we draw from the way Boaz and Ruth conducted themselves with purity and respect, and how can we apply these principles in modern dating and relationships?