THOUGHTS ON THE JOURNEY

Attorneys ‘practice law’ and doctors ‘practice medicine.’ The phrase ‘practice makes perfect’ refers to the idea that the more you practice something, the better you will become at it.

This is because ‘the practice’ allows you to build up the skills and knowledge you need to perform a task effectively and efficiently. Here is a great example:

NBA Basketball player Steph Curry was known for shooting 300-500 three point shots at the end of every team practice. “Often, after practice, when fellow teammates were talking to the media, Curry could be seen (on the court) stopping at five different stations around the three point arc – the corners, the wings and straight on for 10 three point shot attempts. After completing the circuit, he would reverse directions and do it again...and again,” said Steve Bulpett, former columnist of the Boston Herald that has covered NBA basketball since 1985. During heavy playoff runs, after practice, Curry would shoot 200 three point shots in an effort to save energy for the playoff game. “Those serious about the game and getting better might do well to consider that if this is what Stephen Curry believes he needs to do to achieve and maintain his level of play, perhaps younger stars in training may want to increase their personal routine,” said Bulpett.

I hope you will take this into consideration as we look at 1 Corinthians 9:24-27 today.

It is a privilege to serve as your Discipleship Pastor,

Dean
