THOUGHTS ON THE JOURNEY

Few things are more common to people than stress related to money. For most folks, it is the concern over whether they have enough or not. For others, there are concerns over managing it and avoiding critical mistakes. Either way, issues related to money can dominate our thinking and our energy.

“Remember, we are never called to worry in the Bible. We are called to trust. We are called to depend. And we are called to walk in freedom.”

Not surprisingly, the Bible has a fair amount to say about money. It speaks of earning it, saving it, borrowing it, using it, and even multiplying it. The truth be told, one could develop a pretty solid money management strategy just from reading the Bible. Few experts have come up with ideas that are not already found in scripture.

This morning we will talk about money. No, we will not be focused on tithing, though that is a good discipline. We will not be talking about how to get rich. What we will be discussing is having a Biblical relationship with our money that can greatly reduce stress and increase freedom.

Regardless of your current relationship with money, the Bible has something to say to you. Some folks have been blessed financially. Some have figured out how to win with money. Others might still struggle with money. Regardless of where you find yourself, I hope today will bring you a little more freedom as it relates to financial concerns.

Remember, we are never called to worry in the Bible. We are called to trust. We are called to depend. And we are called to walk in freedom. If money has stolen such freedom from you, ask the Lord to use today’s message to bring it back around.

Honored to be your pastor,
