NEW YEARS RESOLUTIONS & SELF CONTROL

New Year's Resolutions & Self-Control

by Joe Reed

I never was one for New Year's resolutions, until recently. They just seemed kinda gimmicky. But I'm starting to get into them. It's been a gradual process. A few New Years ago, I mentally logged a few goals I wanted to achieve in the coming year. Basic ones, as I recall. Read the Bible through, pray more, read more books, eat less, exercise. Really genius level stuff, I know. I'm imagining your shock at my insight.

One of the turning points came when I was listening to Jordan Peterson say that most of us could quite dramatically improve our lives if we could just make a few simple changes in the way we live it – changes we already know we should make anyway. And it struck me because I knew it was self-evidently true.

The problem is, of course, that making such changes is rather difficult. For me, going to the gym means getting up early, going into a public place where other people see my out-of-shapeness and me trying badly to fix it. After ten minutes of jogging, I'm desperately gasping for air, like a Shop Vac with a golf ball stuck in the hose. The pile of weights I manage to move with great effort is quite pitiful, no matter how much I contort my face to do so. And even after I force myself to endure such suffering for a few days, the scale and the mirror laugh at me, insisting my sacrifices are so paltry, I need to make them again, and again, and again. The whole thing is generally a physical, psychological, emotional train wreck.

And don't get me started on trying to control my caloric intake. I love to eat, and I've carefully surrounded myself with people who love to feed me. Don't think that's something I take for granted, I think it's glorious!

I try to read a lot, but between you and me, most of the books I read are theological in nature, and written more in the abstract – they're conceptual and logical, not stories. My mind wanders off with my tummy to ponder chips and cheese while my eyes methodically and uselessly wander back and forth across the page. In a few minutes, I've completely forgotten what I'm reading. I'm envious of those who say they pick up a theology book and can't put it down. I've read one or two of those, but mostly, it's like eating vegetables. I know I should do it, because it's good for me, but why, when we've invented chips.

One of the great perks of my seminary education is that it forced me to read good books that I wouldn't normally read.

While I'm happy I graduated, I'm nervous about having the discipline to keep reading good, if difficult, books. Reading is about the best way I know to improve my mind, and I really do want to have a well-stocked brain.

I want to be a better husband, a better father. To be kinder, less irritable, more available. To spend more hours at home not lost in my phone or quarantined in my shop. To just be present, fully engaged in conversation. With a family like mine, you'd think it would be simple. But I also have a sinful, easily distracted heart, so even this really good thing requires some effort. Dating my wife is always fun, always totally worth it, and frighteningly easy to push off until next week.

The biblical language for all this is self-control. You've heard me say, and I'll say it again, I believe self-control is the most underrated of all the fruits of the Spirit. Funny, because people love controlling other people. I think about how we like to govern other people's behavior – just think of all those little signs at home, at work, at body and make it my slave” (1 Cor 9:27 NIV).

bloody, and generally
no fun. ”

Prayer & Provision

by Josh Martin

The new year is upon us already. God's goodness this past year has been very evident. He has provided for us in many ways. His kindness and graciousness has been incredible to see.

This past year has been a year of great change for Belonn and I. Our daughter Selah was born in December of 2024, so this year has been getting to know the newest addition to our family and remember all the baby things that one needs to do. Middle of the night feedings, diaper changes, nap times, baby cuddles, and enjoying getting to know this little girl.

I was involved in a corporate layoff early this past year that I wasn't expecting. God had His hand on our family through all of it. I have been layed off before, so this wasn't uncharted territory, but it isn't what we hoped for either. God had different plans for us that we weren't expecting. His call to full time ministry was a surprise. Belonn and I prayed for new IT roles for work and nothing came to fruition, which was odd. The Associate Pastor role was posted already, but I had not considered it at all as I wasn't of the mind that God would put me in that role. I was surprised to hear from Pastor Joe when we were fishing one afternoon. That conversation led to more conversations and Belonn and I began to pray and ask God for His direction. Through the prayers and conversations with trusted friends and mentors, God not only showed us his leading toward being in vocational ministry, but He opened our eyes to see His preparation for this time from years prior. We are so grateful for His provision. God has been at work in our lives this past year significantly. He has led us away from our normal things and to other new things. He has been there with us through the transitions and continues to show Himself faithful as we try to follow His lead.

“God is at work at Lewis Lake and He is moving. We need to pray and ask Him what He has for our church, our families, our kids, our nation and our future.”

The last 2 months of 2025 were the first 2 months of full time ministry for me. It has been wonderful to learn and get to know our congregation on a different level than before. The transition has been full of new information and learnings and challenges, all of which were anticipated, but not understood. Joe, Bob, and Tami have helped me immensely. The congregation has surrounded Belonn and I with prayers and encouragement, which has been absolutely wonderful.

We need it! Thank you!

Now we step into 2026. What does the Lord have for us this year? God will be shown to be faithful again this year. He will never leave us nor forsake us, so we should have expectation that He is with us. With that said, I need to pray, WE need to pray for what God has for us this coming year. What will He be doing. What will happen? What will our church look like? What new amazing things will He be doing and what challenges will we be facing? What will anything look like? Our families, marriages, children, school, work, church, friendships, etc.

I have been thinking about prayer differently over the last few months. What does God think of my prayers?

What is happening in my day that concerns God at all? What should I expect from my prayer? How can I pray better? What else should I pray for? All sorts of questions have come up as I have considered prayer. But remember, Abraham prayed for healing. Isaac prayed for his wife. Moses prayed for protection. Hannah prayed for a son. David prayed when he was angry, grateful and full of sorrow. Solomon prayed for a building project. Elisha prayed for sight. Jesus not only modeled prayer

The Colson Corner: A history lesson to teach your kids. And their kids.

by Clark Hauger

The creation mandate from Genesis 1:28 begins with the words, “be fruitful and multiply...” The pattern then reappears in the Noahic covenant (Genesis 9:7) and with Abraham in Genesis 12:1-3. Fruitfulness by offspring was so foundational that Abraham did not withhold sacrificing his son Isaac, believing that God would raise him from the dead in order to fulfill His covenantal promise. God, from the very beginning, has had offspring and multiplying on His divine mind and in His divine design. So, how are we doing with that culturally as Americans in 2026? How are we doing with that as Christians who serve the one true and living God who does not change?

God’s plan for humans has been sexed from the beginning. “So God created man in His own image, in the image of God he created him; male and female he created them (Gen. 1:27). In first, second, and third wave feminism many distinctions between male and female were broken down in the name of equal rights under the law, yet the result arguably simply made women more like men. This played itself out economically through the 1960s and 70s as employers began to pay men less as if to say, “if that’s not enough, tell your wife to go get a job.” Clearly this had implications for family life as women and men’s roles in the workforce changed, thus requiring family life to change.

God’s plan for sex, in the main, has always maintained that there would be the possibility of, if not the purpose for creating offspring. In 1960 the FDA approved the first oral contraceptive. This new technology divorced sex from procreation at a scale never before imagined. We, even now, find ourselves on the doorstep of a new world as sex becomes divorced from having babies via In vitro Fertilization (IVF) apart from the conjugal act with a spouse.

“God has put you in the time and place where you are on purpose and the waves of the world’s deception cannot sway those whose anchor holds within the veil.”

God’s plan for the family has always been one man and one woman until death parts them. Yet, in US jurisprudence 1969 brought California’s Family Law Act of 1969. This “innovation” made getting divorced easier for non-biblical grounds. Simply put, divorce was made easy so the family became considerably less stable, and children often take the brunt of the adults’ wishes.

So, humans with our tower-of-babel-like transhuman tendencies seem to be ready to jump at the prospect of any new technology that allows us to impose our will. That is called the technological imperative. If we can do it, we must. We also have a worldview (or cultural imagination) that has come to view things that were once unthinkable as commonplace or normal. As a human race we don’t have a good track record of doing things God’s way. This shouldn’t surprise us as Christians.

“As Christians,” he says. “What does this mean for me?” you ask. “How am I supposed to stem the tide of millennia of human stupidity?”

God has put you in the time and place where you are on purpose and the waves of the world’s deception cannot sway those whose anchor holds within the veil. So, courageously get married, love your wives, respect your husbands, work hard (Col. 3:23), have lots of kids, raise them in the fear and admonition of the LORD (which is more hard work), and do it with confidence knowing that you’re shining as stars among a perverse generation (Phil. 2:15) wherever God has called you (I Cor 7:17).

AN UNDERSTANDING WAY

by Bob De Young

I don't know if this is how it is in your house or not, but in my house mornings are filled with questions. "Are you going to town for breakfast? What do you want for lunch? I think we will have lasagna for supper. Is that ok with you? What time should we eat so it will not hinder your medications from working?" If we have meatballs for supper I am going to have to go to the grocery store before I come home." And on and on and on it goes every day.

I must confess that on some days I grow a little weary answering all of these questions over and over again. But lately I have found myself pondering this situation and maybe having a few questions of my own. What must it be like to have to figure out every single meal for a lifetime of marriage? What would it be like to have to figure out a solution to this problem every time you woke from a good night's sleep, or maybe even a bad night's sleep? How discouraging it must be to make a meal, only to have those eating it grump and complain. These days I find myself trying to have a little more cooperative attitude during the morning Q and A.

The Apostle Peter wrote to the faithful in one particular church and said this; "Husbands, live with your wives in an understanding way." To live like this means we should understand what it is like to be a wife in general, and your wife in particular. Peter was not necessarily thinking about the business of meal planning, but rather, the whole entire package of being a woman and being a wife. But there is more going on here than simple marriage advice.

The Apostle Paul, writing to the Church in Ephesians says this in Ephesians 4:32. "Be kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, as God in Christ forgave you." Here Paul is speaking to the whole Church and he is asking each one in that Church to live with each other in an understanding way. What is it like to be that other person? What is it like for them to be a member of this congregation? How can I come to understand them and how can I live with them in an understanding way here at Lewis Lake?

Now this call from the Lord is not the magic fix to all of life's problems. I can understand why you do what you do, and still not agree with you. Living with one another in an understanding way may not be the final word on many of the challenges of getting along with others, but it does serve as a really good starting point. Who is this person standing in front of you who has just asked you that frustrating question? What pressures are they living under? What is behind their tone of voice? Answering these kinds of questions can help you know how to respond to them in ways that draw you together, rather than pulling you apart.

Living with someone in an understanding way usually requires more listening than speaking. It means that we should not talk over top of someone. It means asking questions rather than making statements.

Learning all these communication skills may not be the most natural thing for you and me, but God would not have commanded it if it were not important.

church that say, “Don’t do this!” or “Make sure you do this!” We do love our rules (for other people). We mutter, “there oughtta be a law!” when someone double-parks too close to the store entrance. Fact is, we’re happy to control other people.

But controlling ourselves – that’s a different matter altogether. It’s just so darn hard. How hard? Jesus said it might require gouging out eyes and cutting off hands to keep them from doing things you know they shouldn’t. The great Apostle said, “I strike a blow to my body and make it my slave” (1 Cor 9:27 NIV). Self-control is a contact sport. It’s painful, bloody, and generally no fun.

Self-control can mean biting your tongue till it bleeds to prevent an angry outburst, going back to a flip-phone to break the power of pornography, and not snoozing your alarm so you can spend a few moments with God before launching into your day.

I don’t know exactly what self-control looks like for you. We all have different strengths and weaknesses. But I suspect you know, and if you don’t, ask your spouse or your wife or your kids. They know. Then make a commitment to them and to God to go into battle until you emerge victorious, having defeated yourself. Making your resolutions public will put your own sense of honor on the line, it’ll provide some accountability, and just maybe it’ll encourage those around you to make their own resolutions.

You already know many little changes that will greatly improve your mental, spiritual, and physical health. I’ve talked to you about some of mine.

It’s just a matter of committing to them, and doing them.

So do it. Tell your friends. Tell your family. Post it on the fridge. Ask me if I’m going to the gym. Ask me what I’m reading. Ask me if I’m dating my wife. I need it.

for us, but taught us how to pray. Paul prayed for the new believers. God told Solomon, “if my people who are called by my name humble themselves, and pray and seek my face and turn from their wicked ways, then I will hear from heaven and will forgive their sin and heal their land.”

We are beginning prayer week on January 4th this year. I want to encourage you all to pray with me. God tells us in Isaiah that His “house shall be called a house of prayer for all peoples.” God is at work at Lewis Lake and He is moving. We need to pray and ask Him what He has for our church, our families, our kids, our nation and our future. Joe, Bob and I want to be an encouragement to you all this 2026 prayer week. You will receive emails each day from church throughout Prayer week with prayer topics and some video interviews from people in our own congregation talking about what prayer means to them and how they do it. We are setting up times to come and pray at church, to go along with the topics we send to you to pray throughout your day as well.

I look forward to this new year of ministry and am excited for what God has for us this year!

Happy New Year!

May God’s hand be on us through it all,

Get the App!

It's not always easy to keep up with everything that's happening at Lewis Lake. Your life is busy, and so is ours. To that end, we've created the Lewis Lake phone app. Watch sermons, check the church calendar, sign up for events and activities, it's the place to go to see what's happening and plug into the madness. So go wherever you get your apps, and look for Lewis Lake.

Read or Listen to the Bible in a Year

Did you know that our Lewis Lake Church App has a Bible built into it?

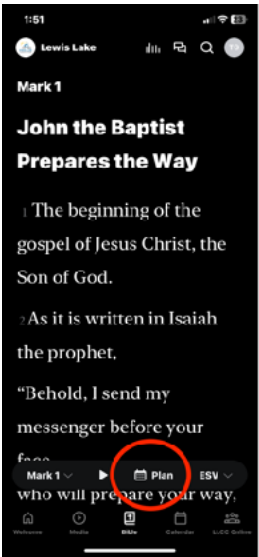

Pastor Joe has a reading plan set up in the app to encourage you to read/listen to your Bible on a daily basis.

Each day there are two different readings. One from the Old Testament and one from the New Testament.

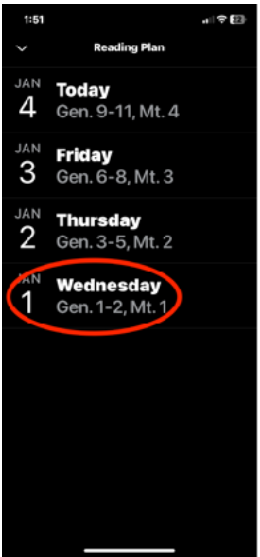

If you need assistance, talk to Tami in the office.

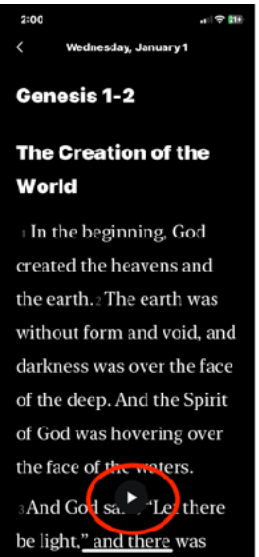

Step One: Open the App and select the Bible on the bottom of your screen.

Step Two: Select "Plan". This will open the reading plan dates.

Step Three: Pick the date. This will open the chosen date readings.

Step Four: You can read or you can tap the "play" button to listen.

Tabletalk Magazine

Tabletalk magazine was formed in 1977 to provide a substantive study tool for Christians. Though its format has changed over the years, Tabletalk continues to challenge and encourage readers to dig deeper into the Word of God in order that their lives may be transformed through the renewing of their minds (Rom. 12:1-2). The aim of the magazine is to articulate Christian truth in an accessible manner.

Initially, serving as the Ligonier Ministries newsletter, Tabletalk changed to a digest format in 1989. In the print magazine, daily Bible studies offer succinct, detailed expositions of the Word of God to assist believers in understanding the biblical text and in applying it to their lives. Every issue contains feature articles by Dr. Sproul and other noted pastors, scholars, and teachers that address a particular biblical, theological, cultural, historical, or Christian-living theme. A variety of columns each month address other key topics related to the church, personal piety, and what it means to honor Christ in this fallen world. At TabletalkMagazine.com, the print magazine is available digitally along with other, online-exclusive articles.

Over the years, Tabletalk has been recognized for its consistent trustworthiness and excellence. Today, people all over the world read Tabletalk on a daily basis. Whether you are a new Christian or have been a believer for many years, there are resources in Tabletalk to help you grow in your faith. (copied from <https://tabletalkmagazine.com/about/>).
