TO EVERYTHING
THERE IS A SEASON, AND
A TIME TO EVERY PURPOSE
UNDER THE HEAVEN: A TIME TO WEEP, AND A TIME TO LAUGH; A TIME TO MOURN,
AND A TIME TO DANCE.

LIE #1 It's always going to be like this

Truth #1

God is at work, bringing change, even if it takes an

unfathomably long time

LIE #2 You're alone

Truth #2

God is with us in all things and has a community of people for us.

LIE #3 This season is a waste

Truth #3

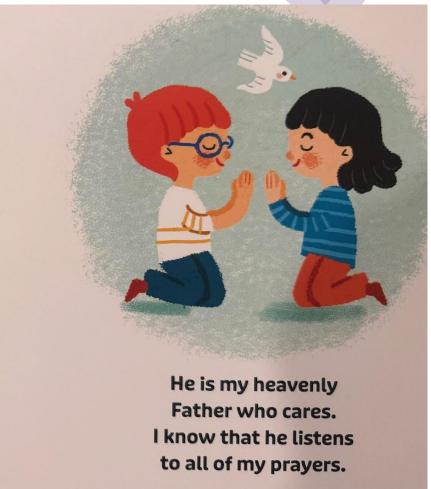

God uses every season

Discussion Questions

- 1. Think back and reflect on a past season. Can you see anything more clearly or find more gratitude than when you were in the thick of it? If so, what –and how does this encourage you as you go into future seasons?
- 2. What season of life are you currently in, and how have you seen God show up in it (or how do you hope He will)?
- 3. Have you ever believed the lie that "It will always be like this" or that "You're alone"? When? Do you still believe it? If not, what was it like battling the lie with God's truth?
- 4. How does the idea that "God uses every season" affect your view of waiting, suffering, or mundane routines (like diaper changes or commuting)?
- 5. What does "talking to God" look like for you in your current season? Has prayer been hard or comforting lately?
- 6. What's one way you can seek or offer support in your current season?
