SHORT HISTORY

For generations, struggling families in Quito, Ecuador built informal settlements in the city's garbage dump, living off the limited resources around them. In the late 1990's, Jerry & Dawn Carnill were serving as missionaries in Quito when they saw these families living and working in the dump. Driven by compassion and faith, they reached out to the community through informal kids clubs. The parents responded positively when they saw volunteers shower love and care upon their children.
