

1. Judges opens with sincere faith and early obedience. Where do you see areas in your life where faith is present but hesitant? What tends to make trust shrink over time?
2. Judah trusted God until obedience became costly. How do we recognize when fear, comfort, or practicality starts shaping our obedience more than trust in God?
3. The tribes did not reject God's commands outright. They partially obeyed them. Why do you think selective obedience can feel reasonable or even wise in the moment?
4. Israel learned to coexist with what God asked them to remove. What are some modern ways Christians can learn to "live with" things that slowly dull spiritual sensitivity?
5. In Judges 2, the people weep and sacrifice, yet the cycle continues. What is the difference between feeling convicted and actually changing direction?
6. God reminds Israel of grace before confronting their disobedience. Why is it important to remember who God is before dealing honestly with where we've fallen short?
7. Judges is a book of repeated patterns. What patterns do you see in your own spiritual life when faith hesitates or obedience becomes selective?
8. Judges shows that human leaders and emotional repentance cannot break the cycle. What does it look like in everyday life to let Jesus, the true King, lead us differently?
