Our work with Auxano was called a "vision framing process." Through the time we spent as a team and working with Clint, we developed the "frame" within which our vision for the future is viewed, and which helps us define the steps toward reaching that vision.

You might recall that the "frame" is made up of four pieces: Mission (our "What?"), Values (our "Why?"), Strategy (our "How?"), and our desired Outcomes (our "When are we successful?"). The Mind the Gap survey that we took back in March was focused on our Outcomes and how they are currently being expressed in the ministry of Eastern Hills. I've already written about the results of the survey.

I want to take my next few times of writing articles for the Life to just review some of the questions that were posed to us on the survey in order to flesh them out a little more, and consider how we might display these more in our lives in obedience to the Spirit's leadership. For today, we'll just look at the five Outcomes themselves. Next time, I'll start fleshing out the way we might express these Outcomes. Our five Outcome statements were all questions, as follows:

"How am I drawing near to the unexpected love of Jesus today?"

"How am I learning to see myself, others, and circumstances as God does?"

"How am I growing Christian friends who are growing me?"

"How are my hands open for God's use today?"

"How am I sharing my faith journey with neighbors where I live, work, and play?"

These are questions that we should be constantly asking ourselves. We're called to draw near to God (James 4:8), to see things and people the way that God does (Matt 9:36-38), to invest in and be invested in by Christian friends (Gal 6:1-2), to be available for God's uses (Mark 12:29-31), and to share our faith with our neighbors (2 Cor 5:20). I'll consider each Outcome and its related expressions in future articles. For the moment, we should pray and ask the Lord to reveal to us how we can live these Outcomes out right now. Let's join together in this ongoing evaluation.

Blessings, Bill
