Jesus' Disappointment

Matthew #114

Matthew 17:14-20

Some have tried to downplay this incident by claiming that there is no demonic activity here.

He (Jesus) is bothered that they are unable to deal with this situation, He expects more out of them.

Matthew 10:5-8

The disciples had success casting out demons.

At a superficial level the disciples did have faith: they expected to be able to exorcise the demon. they are surprised by their failure.... But their faith is poor and shoddy. They are treating the authority given them like a gift of magic.

We think if we just believe hard enough we'll get whatever we want. That's trusting in ourselves rather than in God.

Put your faith where it belongs: not in yourself, but in God.

Donkeys and Diviners Are Under God's Hand

What Balaam's Story in Numbers 22–24 Teaches About Divine Sovereignty

By Ben Wiggershaus

The story of Balaam (Num. 22-24) is a curious aside in the Pentateuch— and not just because it includes a talking donkey.

Exodus through Deuteronomy tells the story of the Israelites, who follow Moses out of Egypt, through the wilderness of Sinai, and to the promised land. These books recount how God established his covenant with his people, the internal and external troubles they faced, laws they were to follow, and even how they arranged their camp.

Strangely, just as the Israelites arrive at their long-awaited destination, poised to enter and inherit the land (22:1), the camera pans away from their encampment. As a result, our protagonists are glaringly absent from the longest continuous story in the book of Numbers. To understand the importance of this cliff-hanger—and, thus, the passage's intent—it's essential to consider its literary and historical context.

Ancient Promises and Mantic Arts

Recall first the assurances God made to Abraham, ancestor of the Israelites. Despite the patriarch being old and having no heir, God promises him his offspring will be a multitude, like the stars of heaven and the sand on the seashore. They'll also inherit a land of promise after having spent time in servitude, and they'll be a blessing to all the families of the earth. Numbers 22-24 references each of these promises. The narrative immediately notes that the Israelites have indeed grown numerous, have come out of Egypt, and are encamped opposite Jericho—about to enter and receive the promised land (22:1–5). This is a significant moment in the fulfillment of God's promises to Abraham and his descendants.

Balaam is labeled a diviner (Joshua 13:22) or one who seeks omens, so it helps to know a little about ancient systems of divination. Ancient Near Eastern deities weren't sovereign. Their decisions could be nullified by incantations and rituals; divine rulings were often at odds with those of competing deities; and they weren't omniscient, demonstrated in their practice of divination. This is the cosmology that underlies the words and actions of Balaam and the Moabite King Balak.

Don't be fooled by Balaam's reference to the God of Israel as "the LORD my God" (22:18); it doesn't mark Balaam as one devoted exclusively to the God of Israel, as it was normal for the ancient Near Easterners to refer to any and multiple deities as their own. Diviners appealed to a plethora of gods multiple times and in numerous ways to reach desirous outcomes.

These capricious deities could be persuaded to answer in the diviner's favor with, for example, aromatic sacrifices performed in consecrated places. Balaam and Balak assume as much in this story. A modern, Western audience might find this kind of worldview absurd, but the Israelites were undoubtedly familiar with it.

God's Sovereignty over the Supernatural

The intrusion of a diviner at this climactic point in Numbers would have raised alarms in the minds of its early readers. The people blessed by God are about to receive a curse from a foreign agent. If the decisions of other gods could be manipulated by practices such as divination, then maybe God's plan for the Israelites could, likewise, be changed. God's promises were able to withstand insurrection, foreign armies, and, of course, sin, only to now be threatened by revocation at the hand of the supernatural arts.

Balak certainly thinks that's the case. Though God asserts the authority to curse and to bless in his promise to Abraham, the Moabite king believes the real power lies in the hands of the diviner Balaam, who can purportedly bend the will of the gods: "For I know that he whom you bless is blessed, and he whom you curse is cursed" (22:6). With Moses absent and unaware of these events, the Israelites have no intercessor to avert disaster. At first, Balaam seems successful in coaxing God to go along with the plan, but the omniscient narrator reveals God's true position in verse 22. By pressing the issue, Balaam (and later Balak) is handed over their sin.

On joining Balak, Balaam attempts to contact God twice by reading omens. Perhaps surprisingly, God answers the diviner both times. The interpretation of those signs, which Balaam relays in poetic form (23:7–10, 18–24), specifically mentions the promises made to Abraham—the Israelites are as numerous as the dust, and the Lord is the God that rescued them from the bondage of Egypt.

As was normal for the practice of divination, Balak demands Balaam make a third and final attempt to sway the God of Israel. All the same preparations are made, but something unexpected happens before the diviner can secure more omens: God, undoubtedly frustrated by Balak's scheming, finally overwhelms Balaam with two prophetic visions (24:3–9, 15–19).

In both, God unequivocally states that the tribes will be securely established—in the land. Further, God reaffirms his promise to Abraham as it applies to Israel: "Blessed are those who bless you, and cursed are those who curse you" (v. 9; see Gen. 12:3). The God of Israel sovereignly fulfills his Word, and no other power can thwart his plan for his people.

Ancient Assurance for Today

That God fulfills his promises isn't a message of assurance reserved only for the Israelites. Paul reminds all believers that, through faith in Jesus Christ, we too are heirs of the promise made to Abraham (Romans 4:13).

God has, indeed, made his people numerous, a church that brings blessing to the ends of the earth. In Christ our Lord, there's no power—either natural or supernatural—that can separate us from our Heavenly Father's promises and love (Romans 8:38–39). ❖

A Hidden Source of Boaz' Compassion

By Barry York

The story of Ruth is a tender one. This young widow came with her likewise widowed mother-in-law Naomi to Israel and began, through the hard work of gleaning, to provide for them. As a foreign woman from a cursed nation, Ruth could have easily been rejected or mistreated.

Instead, in God's providence she was led to glean from the fields of Boaz. A relative of Naomi's deceased husband, Boaz showed compassion to Ruth in providing more "easy pickings" from his fields. The subsequent appeal by Ruth for him to engage in the kinsman redeemer statutes from the Mosaic law (Lev. 25) so they could wed—and Boaz' eagerness to fulfill it—not only warms the heart but encourages the soul. In the redemption Boaz brought to Ruth and Naomi, we see the merciful and protective love of God revealed in Christ. Like Boaz, Christ loved and redeemed an unlikely, unworthy bride. To eternally commemorate this story, God not only captured it in His holy Word. The book of Ruth ends by showing that Ruth became the great-grandmother of King David, from whom Christ came.

As we reflect on the compassion of Boaz for Ruth, certainly it was stirred by many factors. Boaz was clearly a godly man who knew he was to treat laborers, especially poor ones, with kindness (Lev. 19:9-10). Ruth's devotion to Naomi as part of his extended family was noticed by him and moved him (Ruth 2:11). He also appreciated her desire to seek the God of Israel (Ruth 2:12). Ruth's appeal to him to redeem her and Naomi out of their poverty and familial loss, at the sacrifice of pursuing younger men, touched his heart as well (Ruth 3:10). Ultimately the Lord put the compassion for Ruth in the heart of Boaz. Yet did He use another means in the background of Boaz as well?

For recall who was the mother of Boaz—Rahab. In another incredible story of redemption, Rahab the prostitute was granted faith in the Lord and was spared in the destruction of Jericho. With her family, she came in among the people of Israel and ended up marrying Salmon, with whom she had Boaz. Undoubtedly then growing up, Boaz had heard dozens of times the miraculous story of his mother's salvation. Knowing that his own Canaanite mother had been saved by the Lord and joined to the covenant people of God, surely this family history moved Boaz to compassion when he saw this immigrant lady before him and contemplated marrying her.

Do you see someone in your congregation that abounds in mercy toward others, far surpassing the efforts of most? You may not be just witnessing someone who is super obedient or exceptionally gifted. For ask a few questions about his or her past. Behind the scenes may be quite a story of how the Lord put this compassion in a heart. Then let this exercise cause you to contemplate again the remarkable grace God has shown you in Christ. The source for renewed compassion toward others in your own heart is not as far away as you may think. ❖

Proclaiming Evidence for Truth

THIS WEEK'S CREATION MOMENT

Natural Human Language

"And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth." - Genesis 1:28

According to evolution, human language began to develop when ape-like creatures started to grunt and make noises at each other. Eventually, they agreed on meanings for these sounds and language was born. According to the Bible, language is a gift of our Creator, Who is the source of all language. He made us to have fellowship with Him. He gave us language as an important part of our relationship with God.

The evolutionary view of language doesn't explain why the more ancient languages are the most complex, but the biblical view does. The Bible also explains why research is showing that we are programmed for language.

In one instance, researchers studied the communication of profoundly deaf children with hearing parents, neither of whom had ever been taught sign language. These children had never heard or seen normal language, so they wouldn't be influenced by their surroundings. Researchers wanted to find out if the children followed a pattern in how they put their communication together. To their surprise, they found that the children all followed the same patterns of sentence structure. The pattern used by the children is one of two patterns into which all the world's languages can be divided.

This research supports the Bible's claim that we were created with a built-in ability for language.

Team Expansion - South Asia

As we come through the Advent season and celebrate the birth of our Savior, Jesus, I am deeply thankful for this time of reflection and renewal. Advent gives us space to look back on how God has been at work over the past year and to look ahead with hope to the opportunities before us to share the Good News and the life-giving hope we have through believing in and following Jesus with our lives.

One of the greatest answers to prayer this year has been getting connected with the right business partner to launch the travel company, as well as meeting with other qualified friends and contacts to talk, pray, and dream together about how we can grow the business in a way that is both successful and sustainable, while also being a genuine benefit to the people and communities we work with.

Sharing local meals and having deep, life-giving conversations with friends has been one of the meaningful ways I've seen God at work through relationships this year. It has been a joy to host local friends, friends from other cities, like-minded foreigners living in my city, and friends visiting from other countries and share life stories and testimonies together.

Connecting with new friends and leading my first tour for the travel company was another highlight of the year. Since then, we have fully registered the business, opened a company bank account, completed our local tax registrations, and organized three additional tours for a mix of international and local groups. I am grateful for God's favor through each of these steps and for the opportunities this business will create to build relationships and help others experience this special part of the world.

Other highlights this year have included welcoming friends from my home city and introducing them to local friends I have been walking alongside through training and follow-up as they grow in their work and influence. It has been a joy to visit some of their groups and to spend intentional time with them while my guests were here.

I have also had meaningful follow-up and opportunities to share spiritual truth with a friend who attended my Christmas gathering last year. I am thankful both for the opportunity to encourage local friends who are already believers and for the chance to walk gently with friends who are spiritually hungry but currently following other paths.

A new Home, Office, and Community Space...

As I return to my city in the new year, I will be seeking a new living and working space that can better support both my personal life and the growth of the business.

One of the primary reasons for this move is to establish a home with greater freedom to personally host friends and to create a dedicated operational base for the company, a place where I can work alongside new staff, host small cultural workshops, and create a few guest rooms that we can list on Airbnb to host our own visitors and generate income for the company towards the revenue amount needed to sustain my visa.

In addition, I hope for part of the space to be set apart as a prayer and gathering room, where we can host monthly prayer meetings, studies, and training sessions with local friends. One of the ongoing challenges in these efforts has been finding safe, consistent, and appropriate places to meet, so having our own space would provide greater stability, freedom, and continuity to invest in people and relationships over time.

Business Growth...

In the new year, I would love to grow our business team. I am hoping to pay my business partner a living wage and also hire additional team members to help us develop and strengthen our travel company operations.

Would you consider partnering with me on a monthly basis to help cover these salaries during this early growth phase, until the business is able to fully sustain them? I'm seeking a two-year commitment to provide stability during this season of establishing the company. The total monthly amount still needed to cover new staff salaries is $1,350 USD. Thank you for prayerfully considering this opportunity to invest in people, capacity, and long-term sustainability.

Business Vehicles...

In the coming year, my business partner and I are hoping to begin driving travelers ourselves between the cities where we operate. This would allow the business to generate additional income, help meet the financial requirements connected to sustaining my visa, and create a safe and relational space for meaningful conversations with guests who are open to exploring spiritual questions as we travel together. The estimated cost to purchase two seven-seater vehicles (one for each of us) is $50,000 USD. Thank you for your prayers and consideration.

Praise updates

- I'm thankful for new connections and the opportunity to share how God is at work in my region with new friends.
- I'm thankful for the chance to look ahead with prayer and expectation as we watch how God continues to work and grow His Kingdom in South Asia in the year to come.

Prayer Points

- Please pray for favor with the officer reviewing my visa application, and that at least a five-year visa would be granted.
- Please pray for new connections and for God's provision for the monthly and one-time startup costs needed to grow the business in the new year as I return to South Asia.
