Just Traveling Through

I have been on Wilderness Trek multiple times. On Wilderness Trek the group begins at the company's headquarters where we load up our backpacks with food, clothing, cooking supplies, our sleeping bag and a tent. Then it is off to low camp where we leave behind running water and porcelain. The next five days are spent hiking, rappelling, attempting to summit a mountain and smelling bad. I'm sure there were many rules that we had to follow but I only remember one. Our guide told us, "While we are out here leave nothing but footprints and take nothing but pictures." What he was saying is that we are not the owners of this mountain, we are only traveling through. So while we are here we must be good stewards and try to leave it better than we found it.

Among the many life lessons learned on trek this one may be the most profound. We are not residents of this world, we are just passing through. While we are here God has blessed us with many beautiful things and wonderful people. We will also experience many challenging moments to overcome and difficult people who will test us. But one thing is certain, we can't take anything with us when we leave. So enjoy the journey, soak in the beauty and make the most of every opportunity to love those around you. But remember not to get distracted by the things of this world. They are not ours for the taking.

What is your life? You are a mist that appears for a little while and then vanishes. James 4:14

One last thought. Our guide told us to leave nothing but footprints. When we leave this world we will leave our footprints behind. Make sure the footprint you leave behind will be one of love and joy. Leave this world better than you found it.
