Jesus Really Knows What He is Talking About

“People, they’re the worst.” That’s a quote from the television show “Seinfeld”. It sounds so negative, but haven’t we all been there? Maybe it can be as simple as someone cutting you off in traffic or ramming your achilles tendon with a shopping cart. We tend to forget those things rather quickly. But how do you handle it when you are hurt deeply by someone and you just can’t seem to let it go? Several years ago a group of people hurt me in a way that greatly affected the course of my life. The anger I felt occupied my thoughts day and night. I tried to get over it but deep down in my heart I was secretly hoping for their demise. As a Christian I knew this was wrong but the feelings remained.

“But to you who are listening I say: Love your enemies, do good to those who hate you, bless those who curse you, pray for those who mistreat you.” Luke 6:27-28

I knew these words of Jesus in my head but my heart was having a hard time applying them to my current situation. Over time I realized that I was the only one suffering. My bitterness was giving me heartburn, high blood pressure and continual negative thoughts. So I thought I would give the words of Jesus a try. I began to pray for them. I prayed for them to have peace, joy and success. As time passed I continued that prayer until I actually meant it. The results? The negativity in my life subsided, my physical health improved, my mental health improved and most importantly, my spiritual health improved. It finally dawned on me the Jesus really knows what He is talking about.

As Jesus hung on the cross he prayed for forgiveness to those who put Him there. Yes I believe that Jesus truly meant for them to find forgiveness. But Jesus also knew that He did not want to face death with bitterness in His heart. So I say again, Jesus really knows what He is talking about. Maybe we should listen.
